The house

Casa Ether began as a design received from elsewhere. RBC re-read it — circulations, proportions and material language — and built it. Sliding glass walls throughout open the house completely to the countryside, so interior and landscape read as one room. Italian hardwood on floors and ceilings, a Spanish kitchen, and elements taken from the land itself. Full presentation with plans and areas available on request.

Architecture

A country house recomposed from a previous scheme: circulations, proportions and materials were re-read so the plan opens entirely to the landscape.

ROBERTO'S NOTES

We took a design that was not ours and made it belong to the site. The glass walls were the decision that mattered.
